[REDACTED] of the General Counsel's office accompanied two [REDACTED] employees to New York where the two were to testify in the [REDACTED] trial, a criminal action in the Federal courts for alleged pro-Japanese activity in POW camps during the war. The [REDACTED] employees were to testify as to recordings which are being used in evidence. [REDACTED] made arrangements with the Department of Justice and the U. S. Attorney to limit any questions on the employees' present occupations and duties. On questioning in New York, one witness was excused, the other took the stand but no questions were addressed to him which would require release of classified information. There was excellent cooperation on the part of Justice and the U. S. Attorney.
